America's movie industry began life over a hundred years ago in New York; but by 1910, movie makers wanted to find a better [redacted]. In New York, everything was too expensive; workers, land, [redacted]. In addition, it was difficult to make movies in winter, because of the cold [redacted].

However, the small city of Los Angeles in the western state of California, thousands of [redacted] away on the other side of the country, was full of [redacted]. In California, the warm weather and [redacted] meant that people could make films all through the year; and everything was cheaper. And most of all, there was lots of cheap land for sale.

Before long, film companies started to build [redacted] new studios in an area called Hollywood, at the foot of some small dry hills. Movies are expensive to make. For this reason, a small [redacted] of big companies such as MGM, 20th Century Fox, Warner Bros. and Paramount started to take over smaller companies.

Many old film companies have [redacted], but some new ones have appeared, companies like Walt Disney and Steven Spielberg's company Amblin. Hollywood has changed a lot in 80 years
